Busse, Michele Conrady, Got Silk?: Buying, Selling, and Advertising British Luxury Imports During the Stamp Act Crisis. Master of Arts (History), August 2007, 188 pp., 9 tables, 20 figures, references, 62 titles.

Despite the amount of scholarship on the Stamp Act Crisis, no study has used advertisements as a main source. This study attempts to show that a valuable, objective source has been overlooked, through the quantitative analysis of 5,810 advertisements before, during and after the Stamp Act Crisis from five port cities: Boston, Charleston, Philadelphia, New York, and Portsmouth. The findings reveal the colonists' strong connection to imported British luxury goods, and a lack of interest in American-made goods, especially before and after the boycott. Advertisements also demonstrate that the decision of many merchants to place the needs and expectations of their community before their own personal gain offered a rare economic opportunity for others. The colonists' devotion to imports tested the strength of the boycott, especially among Boston merchants, who continued to advertise imported goods a good deal more than any other city.

This lack of dedication to the boycott on the part of the Boston merchants shows disunity among the colonies, at a time when many argue was the first instance of colonial nationalism. Capitalism challenged and undermined a commitment to communal sentiments such as nationalism. Moreover, if Americans did share a sense of nationhood during the Stamp Act Crisis, it cannot be gauged by a rejection of "Englishness."

PREFACE

My study of advertisements began as a suggestion for a seminar paper. When my professor, Dr. Guy Chet, advised that an analysis of advertisements during the colonial period would be a good topic for a seminar paper, I was immediately intrigued. Having browsed through a few colonial newspapers, I had noticed that advertisements took up almost the entire paper and wondered why they had been, for the most part, ignored by historians. With a bachelor's degree in marketing, I thought I could provide unique insight into a study of advertisements.

I examined advertisements in four major cities and a minor city—Boston, Charleston, New York, Philadelphia and Portsmouth (New Hampshire)—for this study. Each of the larger cities were selected because they had major ports, which made merchandizing a major part of their economies. They also represent the largest cities in each region: New England, the South, and the middle colonies. They were also the only major cities in which newspapers printed consistently throughout the Stamp Act crisis. Since no newspapers in any other major cities were published during this period, I included Portsmouth, New Hampshire to see what effects the Stamp Act boycott had on advertising in a smaller port city.<sup>1</sup> I analyzed advertising in each of the five cities from July 1, 1765 through July 31, 1766. This period covers the four months before the boycott, the three-and-a-half months of the boycott, and three and a half months following the boycott. The ads were divided into three main categories. First are those advertisements that have nothing to do with consumer goods, such as ads for land for sale; these were not used in this study. The second group includes ads by colonial artisans, such as shoemakers and silversmiths. These ads were included when the craftsman in question had to compete with imported goods. The third type of ad, and by far the largest group, advertised consumer goods to be sold. All of these ads were included; in the end the total number of ads examined was 5,810.

<sup>1</sup> I originally set out to study five major cities, hoping to study two southern cities instead of one. However, the newspapers in all other major southern cities quit publishing during the Stamp Act crisis for a period of at least several months. With all suspension beginning in November 1765: Annapolis's Maryland Gazette was suspended until March 1766, Savannah's Georgia Gazette was suspended until May 1766, and Williamsburg's Virginia Gazette was suspended until March 1766. There was no paper published yet in Baltimore, Maryland during the time of the Stamp Act. I also considered studying advertisements of a city on the frontier, farther away from the city's influence. However, frontier cities did not publish newspapers as early as 1765.

Ads were taken from two of the most predominant papers of each city, and supplemented by others when issues in the time frame were not available.<sup>2</sup> For Philadelphia, the papers examined were the Pennsylvania Gazette and the Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advisor. The Boston newspapers were the Boston Gazette and County Journal and the Boston-Evening Post. The New York papers were the New York Mercury and the New-York Gazette or the Weekly Post-Boy. The South Carolina Gazette and the South Carolina Gazette and Country Journal were the papers examined from Charleston.<sup>3</sup> The only paper published during the time in question in Portsmouth was the New Hampshire Gazette and Historical Chronicle. When quoting ads I attempted to keep the original appearance intact whenever possible, including misspellings, the use of italics, and capitalizations.

<sup>2</sup> The supplemental papers include the Boston Post-Boy and Advertiser, the Massachusetts Gazette and Boston News-Letter.

<sup>3</sup> Only one paper printed in Charleston during this period. The South Carolina Gazette suspended printing from November 1, 1765 until June 1766. The South Carolina Gazette and Country Journal began printing in the middle of December 1765, so when both papers were combined, the study only used data from one Charleston paper at a time, minus the six weeks when no paper was printed.

Identifying the starting point of the boycott turned out to be more difficult than expected. I determined the official started date of the boycott based on the date merchant groups in each of the cities selected and printed in local newspapers. Since there was no official boycott by the merchants of Portsmouth, NH, I used the dates of the Boston boycott and added one week of travel time for Portsmouth. Charleston merchants never signed a written agreement either, opting to try to have the Stamp Act repealed through legal methods. When they realized that this option failed, the merchants boycotted without the formal agreement on February 3, 1766.

It was extremely difficult to determine an official end to the boycott as well, since news of the Stamp Act's repeal came in different forms and arrived at different times in each city. In many cities, rumors of the repeal often arrived weeks before the official news from London. These rumors often came from other colonial cities or ships' captains just in from the Caribbean, but not from anyone with firsthand knowledge. Based on the entries in the diary of John Rowe, a Boston merchant, and the articles in the Boston papers, I concluded that the merchants there officially considered the boycott over once they received word of the repeal from a ship captain who had arrived directly from Great Britain.<sup>4</sup> This methodology was then applied to the other three cities.

When presenting an earlier version of this paper at a conference, it was suggested by the moderator that perhaps the changes observed in advertisements were changes that happened regularly as result of changing seasons instead of resulting from the non-importation agreement (the boycott occurred in winter and early spring).

In an effort to settle this question, I analyzed over 600 ads from the Pennsylvania Gazette in the same period, one year earlier, July 1764 through July 1765. When the ads were compared (see Figures 1-3), it became evident that changes that occurred in the total number of advertisements, the percentage of ads for imports, and the percentage of ads of American-made goods were indeed a result of the boycott and not the season.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

In the spring of 1765, the colonists learned that the Stamp Act was passed and scheduled to go into effect on November 1, 1765. Considered the first tax of its kind, the Stamp Act was a direct parliamentary tax on the colonists. It required a purchased stamp placed on various everyday printed items, such as wills, deeds, books, playing cards and newspapers. Equally significant, the Stamp Act stated that violators would be tried in military tribunals, rather than by civilian juries. Colonists reacted with an outburst of anger and protest. In an effort to fight back, merchants in New York, Philadelphia, and later Boston, signed agreements to boycott British imports until the repeal of the Stamp Act.

The Stamp Act boycott was a significant revolutionary action by the colonists. Many historians argue that it united the different colonies in America as well as different groups within each colony for the first time. The boycott is also important because economic warfare had rarely been used for political gain in the past.<sup>5</sup> As a result of this significance, historians have devoted much effort to studying the boycott from many different angles. This includes many studies of contemporary newspaper content.

Few historians doubt that newspapers played a pivotal role in the spread of ideas among the communities of colonial America. In fact, they were often the main form of communication for the colonists. While pressruns averaged about a thousand copies, papers were also kept and read in popular taverns and coffeehouses, making the exact number of readers difficult to ascertain.<sup>6</sup> These papers influenced the colonists greatly and are considered a main source of news for a majority of colonists, reaching even the illiterate through public readings.<sup>7</sup>

Newspapers were crucial to colonial life, and advertising was an increasingly essential part of any colonial paper. These advertisements comprised almost half of the newspaper in most cases and typically appeared in the back of the paper until printers realized their importance and began placing them on the front page. In 1760, a colonial newspaper's entire front page was comprised of advertisements for the first time.<sup>8</sup> Eventually, in 1785, advertisements led to a change in publication frequency in the United States, from weekly to daily editions, due to the desire to include more advertisements, not news articles.<sup>9</sup>

Of greater significance, advertisements provide more information on colonists' daily lives than do the news items in colonial newspapers. The news section in most papers typically contained articles from foreign places and included very little on local affairs. Since advertisements represented almost the only local information, they were of greater interest to the average reader.<sup>10</sup> It is in the advertisements that one learns the detailed inner workings of communities, such as what goods were popular, times of scheduled meetings, and even which wives had left their husbands. “It is the advertisements, furthermore, that provide the local color, and enable the historian to reconstruct the picture of a community far more than all the reading matter in the so-called news.”<sup>11</sup>

Despite the potential insight a full analysis of advertising could provide to colonial history, very few studies have included it. Several historians have incorporated brief discussions of advertising, but only as a minor part of their focus. T. H. Breen’s The Marketplace of Revolution: How Consumer Politics Shaped American Independence provides a good example of this.<sup>12</sup> Other historians have published indices of regional advertisements, such as Alfred Coxe Prime’s The Arts and Crafts in Philadelphia, Maryland and South Carolina, 1721-1785, which provides a catalogue of American artisans’ advertisements during the colonial period.<sup>13</sup> In “Colonial Newspaper

Advertising: A Step toward Freedom of the Press,” Steven J. Shaw argues that it was through advertisements that colonial printers gained freedom of the press, as advertising revenue allowed printers to escape dependence on political subsidy.<sup>14</sup> A few graduate students have approached the topic as well, including Robert Magnum Barrow and Wesley Herndon Wallace. Barrow studies advertisements in an attempt to show that advertising formed as crucial a part of life and economics in the colonial era as it did in 1954.<sup>15</sup> In his Masters thesis on North Carolina advertisements, Wallace argues that only advertising could provide a true example of colonial daily life and social history.<sup>16</sup>

Most histories of American advertising focus mainly on the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.<sup>17</sup> Few have included sections on colonial advertising; the few that have typically fail to mention the Stamp Act crisis. The most comprehensive history is Frank Presbrey’s The History and Development of Advertising, which begins with ancient Babylonian symbols and continues to advertising in the 1920s. The book does include a chapter on the Stamp Act crisis but focuses mainly on how it affected the newspaper industry and how printers dealt with paper shortages.<sup>18</sup> In Personalities and Products, Edd Applegate attempts to provide a historical account of individuals who “contributed greatly to advertising.” Applegate does devote a chapter to colonial advertising but focuses mainly on the individual printers and their practices.<sup>19</sup> With such deficit in research on advertising during this period, much can be gained by an analysis of advertising during the Stamp Act crisis.

This study provides analysis of advertisements printed from July 1, 1765 through July 31, 1766 in weekly newspapers of four major cities—New York, Philadelphia, Charleston and Boston—and one minor city—Portsmouth, New Hampshire.<sup>20</sup> This period covers four months of typical advertising before the boycott, three and a half months during the boycott, and three and a half months following the boycott. These newspapers offer a representative sample of major newspapers that the colonists in these cities read, as well as a representative sample of the advertisements merchants published during that year.

A statistical and textual analysis of advertising during the Stamp Act boycott reveals a politicization of consumer goods and advertisements as well as changes in merchants’ behavior and business practices. It uncovers not only compliance with the public “buy American” campaign, but also resistance and indifference towards it. This tension between communitarian values (revealed through communal pressures and expectations) and individualistic capitalist interests of merchants is one of the key findings of this study. After reaching separate agreements to boycott imports, merchants in each city handled the boycott differently. Boston in particular stands out in this respect, for its merchants' and consumers' relative indifference to the American campaign of commercial coercion and home manufacturing. Indeed, advertisements published throughout 1765-1766 demonstrate how important British goods were to American culture and how attached Americans had become to these imports. Following the repeal of the Stamp Act, advertising shows colonists' continued attachment to British goods and a quick return to normal business practices.

Advertising was increasingly important during the 1760s because the American colonies had by then become a culture driven and defined by the consumption of imported luxury goods.<sup>21</sup> In The Economy of British America, John McCusker and Russell Menard note that almost 90 percent of all goods imported from Britain to the colonies were manufactured or semi-manufactured goods.<sup>22</sup> These British consumer goods, such as china, textiles, tea, glass and other manufactured household items were considered luxury goods, as they were not necessary for survival, but simply something the colonists wanted. However, as argued in Birth of a Consumer Society, the “desire to consume” was not new to the eighteenth century, but it was masses’ “ability to consume” that was a novelty at the mid-century mark.<sup>23</sup> This reliance on imports applied to American colonists of all localities and classes – not only elites and urbanites, but also lower class and rural farmers – refuting the traditional historical belief that most colonists were living on self-sufficient farms.<sup>24</sup> Carole Shammas estimates that by the time of the American Revolution, at least 30 percent of the per capita income in any colony was spent on imported goods and 75 percent of those goods were consumer commodities.<sup>25</sup> Bernard Bailyn determined that, “England’s exports to North America increased almost eightfold from 1700 to 1773; between 1750 and 1773 it rose 120 percent...”<sup>26</sup> Simply stated by Maxine Berg, “British goods dominated the consumer cultures of the American colonies.”<sup>27</sup>

While British manufactures were of superior quality and cheaper in price than most goods made in America, T. H. Breen argues that, more important, the colonists’ experienced an emotional attachment to imports, which provided positive associations of home and the English culture they frequently tried to emulate.<sup>28</sup> Indeed, owning British luxury goods became ingrained in English culture, and part of what defined an Englishman. As British subjects, American colonists were simply living up to their British heritage and acting out their English identity by consuming imports.<sup>29</sup> These goods were not only functional then, but also provided the colonists with a sense of self-image, a “valuable indication of who and what they were.”<sup>30</sup> Imports added variety and color to the lives of the colonists, offering them the opportunity of choice as well.<sup>31</sup> At the center of this newfound selection of goods was a growing retail industry, with advertising becoming an integral part of its robust progress. As Berg notes, “the retailing of new consumer goods was absolutely dependent on advertising.”<sup>32</sup>

Given this commercial anglophilia, a campaign to forsake British goods and “Buy American” during the Stamp Act crisis would be an uphill struggle. Yet, historians agree that during the Stamp Act crisis the previously separate colonies united for the first time for a common goal. The boycott provides a concrete example of this unification, with the publicly displayed devotion of merchants in the different colonies to place the good of the “nation” before their own. Some historians note that while the colonists were not able to stop importing goods totally, the psychological unification that resulted from the boycott was truly significant. Breen takes this theory a step further, arguing that consumer culture and a common “language of goods” first unified the individual colonies, leading them to create a new form of political protest in 1765 and, ultimately, to the Revolution. Evidence of this unification of goods is first noticed during the Stamp Act boycott, when everyday items became a symbol of patriotism and one’s willingness to sacrifice became a visible test of loyalty.<sup>33</sup>

CHAPTER 2

BEFORE THE CRISIS: A CULTURE OF IMPORTS

Before the Stamp Act went into effect, advertisements dominated colonial newspapers, providing printers with a crucial source of income. Many colonial papers even included the word “Advertiser” in their title, such as the Boston Post-Boy and Advertiser and the Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advisor. In some of the cities, advertisements took up over half of the paper. Pre-Stamp Act colonial papers averaged four pages a week and, since they were usually unable to include all of the week’s ads in those four pages, frequently included a two- to three-page supplement mainly comprised of advertisements. A variety of newspapers placed ads in the front page in between news articles. The South Carolina Gazette was more reliant on ads than most, as ads often comprised three pages of the four-page paper and the entire two-page supplement. Five pages of the weekly paper were used for advertising and only one for news articles. Boston papers usually included two and a half pages of ads, leaving one and a half pages for news. Approximately twice a month, when the paper included a supplement, it consisted almost entirely of ads. Philadelphia papers tended to be smaller, staying mainly with the four-page format and rarely attaching a supplement. Of the four pages, advertisements accounted for two, leaving two pages for news. In New York, papers tended to have one and a half pages of ads and two and a half pages of news. The New Hampshire Gazette and Historical Chronicle, printed in Portsmouth, the small port city outside of Boston, had a similar breakdown with one and a half pages of news. The fact that advertisements comprised such a large portion of these colonial papers indicates what an important and necessary role they played in printers' incomes, as well as in colonists' interests.<sup>34</sup>

The number of ads fluctuated in cycles, with some weeks having two or three times as many ads as the previous week. This can be attributed to new shipments usually arriving at similar times, often affected by weather. The number of pages a newspaper devoted to ad space did not always directly correspond with the monthly average of individual ads for each city (see Table 1, Figure 1). Charleston's newspaper allocated the most space to advertisements, and it also averaged the most ads by far, at 140 ads a month. New York paper, however, devoted the least amount to ad space, but had the next highest monthly average, at 81 (While New York newspapers used comparatively little ad space, the ads were typically smaller). Boston's and Philadelphia's averages were similar, at 51 and 46 per month respectively. It must be noted that Charleston's average almost doubled New York's and tripled Philadelphia's, showing Charleston's greater dependence on consumer culture.

Not only did ads encompass a significant part of a paper, but the individual ads could be quite long and detailed in their descriptions. This was a recent development by the time of the passage of the Stamp Act, as it was during the early 1760s that ads had begun to grow in size, some taking up as much as half a page.<sup>35</sup> Many of the ads read as an inventory list of what a particular merchant was selling. This is exemplified in the following ad from the Pennsylvania Gazette:

Lately imported from London and Bristol, and to be sold by SHAW and SPROGELL, At their store, the north east corner of Second and Arch streets, being the store formerly occupied by Thomas Maybury, Broadcloths, naps, bearskins, duffels, spotted swanskins, rugs, flannels, striped cotton linceys, lincey woolseys, halfthicks, shaloons, damasks, calimancoes, durants, tammies, dorsetteens, allopeens, everlastings, striped and plain camblets, cross barred stuffs, worsted hose, 3 qr. 7 8ths yd. wd. and yd. 3 8ths wd. cotton and linen checks, ozenbrigs, Irish linens and sheetings, dowlas, princes linens, fustians, cambricks and lawns, napkeening and clouting diaper, bed bunts, Flanders ticks and bed ticking,

cottons and calicoes, buckram, an assortment of ribbons, ferrits, silk and cotton mitts, crimson leather ditto, mens and womens gloves, needles, pins, striped laces, Scots, whited brown and coloured threads, writing paper, horse whips, nonsopretties, round and flat shirt buttons, white and striped tapes, scarf twist, mohair and silk and hair, an assortment of buttons and buckles, knives and forks, pistol cap and cutteau knives, pen ditto, scissors, padlocks, gimblets, roasting jacks, coffee and pepper mills, chasing dishes, shovels and tongs, box irons, pewter hammers, snuff and tobacco boxes, candlesticks, English bend leather soals, saffron, cloves, mace and cinnamon, awl hafts and blades, Jews harps, &c, &c, &c, They have likewise for sale, a quantity of pork, myrtle an bees wax, leathers, Maybury's bar iron and small square stoves.<sup>36</sup>

The change in the length of ads was the result of the explosion of choice and variety for American consumers in the 1760s. In the 1740s, ads were typically short and generic, with little detail listed. By the 1760s, one finds sudden increase in selection and many specifics used in ads.<sup>37</sup> A good example of this was the ad for goods "Imported in the last ships" sold by Susanna Renken, which advertised:

Pink blue, green and brown Ducapes; pink blue green and brown English Damasks, India ditto, Taffaties, Persians,... black blue crimson pink and white satin, black and coloured satin hatts and bonnets, silk shoes and clogs, English and Lynn Shoes, Childrens Morocco ditto, Chinces, Patches, Fashionable Trimmings,...black and white silk gloves and mitts....Gauzes, Irish Linnens....<sup>38</sup>

An advertisement for merchant George Parker who "Hath imported in the last Vessels from LONDON and BRISTOL, an Assortment of GOODS, suitable for the present and ensuing Season," included, "thread, worsted, cotton and silk hose."<sup>39</sup> With such detailed wording, ads were quickly becoming "guides for consumer choice".<sup>40</sup>

With limited means to make their ads effective and eye catching, merchants often capitalized or used bold typeface for crucial words or italicized key phrases. Some advertisements targeted specific consumers, for example by capitalizing the word “Women’s” or occasionally including a picture of the primary good being advertised. A good example of this can be found in merchant John Milligan’s ad which included a picture of a woman’s shoe:

Just imported and sold by JOHN MILLIGAN, At the Woman Shoes Store on Rotten-Row, and at his house in Beaver-Street, New-York: WOMEN’S, Maid’s Girl’s and Children’s Shoes of Hose’s make. Likewise all Sorts of Bristol ditto, by the Trunk or single Dozen, (pick and choose) as cheap as is sold by the Box in Town; Men’s Shoes and Pumps, single and double channel’d at a cheap Rate – Also, Dry goods of all Kinds: Clogs and Goloshoes: Likewise, Turlington’s genuine Balfam of Life.—And Drugs and Medicines in general.<sup>41</sup>

The language merchants commonly used in ads can provide insight into their opinions of their customers and trends in customer service at the time. Some ads were addressed to no one in particular; however, many merchants appealed to their customers and endeavored to develop a relationship with them through the use of certain titles.<sup>42</sup> They would frequently address ads to “gentlemen and ladies” even when referring to the common public, which showed customers respect, by referring to them with a title typically reserved for the elite. Many ads were often directed to “friends,” when referring to the public at large, thus making the ad more personal, as if the merchant had already established a good rapport with the individual. Thomas Horsey, a tin plate worker, applied both methods in his ad, first informing his “friends and customers” that he had moved his shop’s location, and second advising that “Gentlemen and ladies may be supplied with all sorts of tin ware made agreeable to their own taste, AS CHEAP AS IMPORTED.” He ended the ad by thanking his “friends and customers” for their business and promised to maintain his quality of work.<sup>43</sup>

Countless ads for non-essentials included vague references to price such as “very cheap,” or “reasonable rates,” which showed that luxury goods were being consumed by the population at large. Rich and poor consumers alike could appreciate a bargain. This wording suggested that the merchants appealed to a broad range of consumers when references to cost were included. Jeweler Jonathan Sarrazin mentioned that, “he flatters himself he can sell as cheap any one in province” in his ad for sterling plate and jewelry.<sup>44</sup> However, the mention of “good quality” applied to all classes; merchants knew that their customers were conscious of quality and trends and wanted assurances of that the goods were of high excellence considered fashionable.<sup>45</sup> In John Lasher’s advertisement, he publicized that he made and sold, “THE VERY BEST Silk, Calimanco, and Ruffel SHOES.” He also made it a point to include that,

October 24.
CHOICE pickled lobsters in small tins, first imported and done in the best manner, to be sold by BENJAMIN JACKSON, at his mustard and chocolate store, next door to the London coffee-house, in Market-street, Philadelphia, who manufactures the genuine flour of mustard to all degrees of fineness, in such a manner that he will warrant to exceed any from England or elsewhere, and keep good even in the very hottest climate, he sells it in proper glass bottles, or any other package that may best suit the buyer, and at very reasonable rates, particularly to those who buy a quantity for exportation; said Jackson also manufactures chocolate in the best manner, which he sells at the most reasonable rates, and good vinegar very cheap by the hoghead or barrel, having a large quantity on hand; he also is vinegar by retail, as likewise flour of mustard and chocolate as usual, raw West-India coffee, do. roasted, and roasted and ground do. done in its great perfection as at the roasting office in London; and rye done in the imitation of coffee, in the best manner, oat groats, oat meal, English split peas, rice and ground ginger, spices in general, teas, sugar, raisins, currants, prunes, whole and ground rice, &c. also choice salted oyl and pickles of many sorts, both foreign and home made, &c. &c.
 N. B. As I find it has been pretty generally understood, that I have constantly lived in Leticia Court, where my original mustard and chocolate store was, and whither my company has been kept ever since I took a partner, which was in the year 1759, at which time I removed to company's mill, and not thinking of this consequence, I left a large sign board over my store door in Leticia Court, which I had fixed for myself, when I first went to live there, long before our partnership commenced, with the following words thereon in very large letters, viz. BENJAMIN JACKSON, MUSTARD and CHOCOLATE Maker from LONDON, which board I find has been one great occasion of the mistake. This is therefore to advertise the public and assure them I have not lived in Leticia Court since the fall of the year 1759, nor given my residence there, and that my late partner capt. Jonathan Crathorn did not sell from there. That our correspondence is now dissolved, and that I now live next door to the London coffee house as aforesaid, where all those who may please to send their orders, either by letter or otherwise, may depend on having them faithfully and expeditiously completed; and the favour gratefully and thankfully acknowledged by their obliged friend, BENJAMIN JACKSON.
 At those manufactures are altogether American, and will be warranted such as no European can excel, it is hoped they will meet with proper encouragement.

“Ladies in general, may depend on being supplied with the above, not inferior, if not superior to any hitherto imported,” since he advertised an American-made product that was therefore, automatically considered to be inferior to imported goods.<sup>46</sup> As Maxine Berg notes, “in providing information they (advertisements) offered judgment; the text and image invited the buyer into a conversation on choice, accessories, ornament, and adaptation.”<sup>47</sup>

By the mid-eighteenth century, the American colonies had become cultures driven by the consumption of imported goods. These imported goods, including luxury items, were being consumed at increasing levels not just by elites and city-dwellers, but by the average colonists as well.<sup>48</sup> That colonists relied so heavily on British imports is evidenced by advertisements from July 1765 through October 1765 (see Table 2, Figure 2). For example, New York, the city least dependent on imports, devoted 57 percent of its 651 ads during this period to imports. Similarly, 59 percent of Philadelphia’s total advertisements were for British goods. Imports were equally crucial in Boston, where ads for British goods averaged 75 percent of all ads before the Stamp

Colonists desired British goods for a variety of reasons. Being an ocean away from England, such goods conveyed positive associations, helping the Anglo-Americans feel closer to the culture of their home country.<sup>49</sup> These goods also conveyed class and gentility and were, therefore, crucial to any attempt at social climbing and other displays of social rank.<sup>50</sup> Imports also brought color and variety to the colonists' lives. Most notably, the quality of British goods was superior to those made in the colonies. Given these factors, it is not difficult to see how the colonists quickly became fascinated with imports.<sup>51</sup>

The fact that imported goods were extremely important to the colonists, taking up so much of their spending money and such a large portion of their newspaper advertising, indicates that buying American-made goods was not one of their priorities. Indeed Englishmen on both sides of the Atlantic believed that goods made in America were inferior. Colonists' growing taste for European goods represents a clearly discerned aspect of American life—the attempt by English colonists of all social ranks to emulate Britain's culture, fashions, and lifestyle.<sup>52</sup> This was particularly apparent in the textile industry, since British products were not only considered to be better than local manufactures, but also were demonstrably cheaper.<sup>53</sup> This was evidenced by the number of ads for American-made goods prior to the Stamp Act boycott (see Table 3, Figure 3). In Philadelphia, advertisements for American-made goods represented 21 percent of all ads before the Stamp Act, hitting a high of 26 percent in July 1765. New York had a similar ratio, with the average before the Stamp Act at 20 percent. Boston ads for American-made goods averaged 14 percent overall, but exhibited sharp fluctuations, dipping as low as 3 percent of all ads sampled in October 1765. Charleston ads averaged 9 percent for American-made goods. Especially when compared to import ads, which never dipped below 60 percent of total advertising, the colonists' lack of interest in American-made goods is clearly apparent.

The period before the Stamp Act boycott shows a practice of business as usual. Advertising took the form of long detailed ads and often took up at least half the pages of the newspaper. Crucial words and phrases in the ads reveals merchants' target consumers and sheds light on what was important to these consumers. Colonial advertising betrays a lack of desire for goods manufactured in America and an emotional attachment to British manufactures – an attachment to their quality and to the moral and status benefits that they conferred on their owners. Most important, a study of colonial advertising demonstrates enthusiastic participation in a consumer culture driven by imports, especially Charleston and Boston. It was this devotion, argues T. H. Breen, that became the unlikely glue that bound the colonies together during this first boycott, however briefly it was sustained.<sup>54</sup>

The Marketplace of Revolution argues, therefore, that the colonists' shared experience as consumers provided them with the cultural resources needed to develop a bold new form of political protest. In this unprecedented context, private decisions were interpreted as political acts; consumer choices communicated personal loyalties. Goods became the foundation of trust, for one's willingness to sacrifice the pleasures of the market provided a remarkably visible and effective test of allegiance.<sup>55</sup>

CHAPTER 3

THE BOYCOTT: TENSIONS OF COMMUNITY AND CAPITALISM

The centrality of commercial advertising to colonial newspapers makes these papers a useful and effective gauge of the commercial practices and attitudes of merchants and consumers during the Stamp Act crisis. A statistical and textual analysis of ads shows consistent resilience in consumers' attachment to imports, especially in Boston, despite public pressure on merchants to conform and comply with the boycott that the merchants imposed on themselves. Nevertheless, the evidence indicates that the public—inflamed consumers—wielded considerable power over printers and merchants, affecting dramatic shifts in their commercial practices. For consumers and merchants alike respectability and conformity to communal values clashed with the values of market capitalism—consumerism, supply and demand. The Stamp Act crisis exhibited a variety of ways in which printers, merchants and consumers of newspapers and manufactured goods dealt with this tension.

On October 31, 1765, a number of New York merchants met at the house of Mr. George Burns to discuss their course of action in response to the Stamp Act. They consented to cancel all orders already sent to British suppliers. Goods that had already left Great Britain for the colonies were allowed to be sold, but it was agreed that no new orders could be placed until the Stamp Act was repealed. The merchants also decided that they would not “vend any goods or merchandizes” that had been imported after January 1, 1766 unless the Stamp Act was repealed. They unanimously agreed that previous resolutions were binding until declared abolished at another meeting of the same forum. Close to two hundred merchants signed this agreement. Similarly, the

“Retailers of Goods” of New York also promised not to “buy any Goods, Wares, or Merchandizes ...that shall be shipped from Great Britain, after the first Day of January next; unless the STAMP ACT shall be repealed.”<sup>56</sup>

Philadelphia merchants immediately followed suit with a five-part non-importation agreement almost identical to the New York pact on November 7, 1765. They did allow, however, the importation of “dye stuffs” and “utensils necessary for manufactures.”<sup>57</sup> Each merchant promised to strictly adhere to the agreement and formed a committee to investigate and deal with those suspected of breaking it.<sup>58</sup> Unlike New York and Philadelphia, Boston merchants were reluctant to agree to non-importation. However, after some persuasion by the “popular party newspaper” and the “threat of non-consumption agreements”, as well as merchants in New York and Philadelphia, an association of Boston merchants signed a similar pact on December 9, 1765.<sup>59</sup> The Boston agreement allowed a few more categories of goods to be imported to Boston than did the New York and Philadelphia compacts, such as tools used for fishing.<sup>60</sup> Another difference in the Boston agreement was that it formed no committee to take

<sup>58</sup> The merchants appointed to the committee were Thomas Willing, Samuel Mifflin, Thomas Montgomery, Samuel Howell, Samuel Wharton, John Rhea, William Fisher, Joshua Fisher, Peter Chevalier, Benjamin Fuller, and Abel James.; Pennsylvania Gazette, 7 November 1765; Pennsylvania Gazette, 14 November 1765; The Philadelphia agreement was signed by approximately four hundred Philadelphia merchants.

Andrews, “The Boston Merchants and the Non-Importation Movement,” Colonial Society of Massachusetts, Transactions (1916-917), 159-259.

<sup>60</sup> Boston merchants allowed themselves to import “hemp, canvas, salt, coals, grindstones, pipes, empty bottles, wool cards, brimstone, copperas, dying-stuffs, and utensils for carrying on manufactures, and such articles as may be absolutely necessary for carrying on fishery.” [Boston Gazette and County Journal, 16 December 1765] New York and Philadelphia merchants allowed ships to bring back empty bottles, grindstones, pipes and crates of earthen ware and other bulky articles usually used to fill ships.

action if the agreement was violated by any of the roughly two hundred fifty signatories.<sup>61</sup> Merchants in smaller cities close to New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, such as Albany, Marblehead, and Salem, signed their own non-importation agreements at the same time or a few weeks later, thus launching the Stamp Act boycott.

Farther south, Charleston merchants participated in this boycott, but never officially committed to it in writing like merchants in northern cities. In January 1776, several letters appeared in the South-Carolina Gazette and Country Journal from merchants and others that stated how beneficial a boycott would be.<sup>62</sup> First, the merchants attempted to fight the Stamp Act through legal means, petitioning on January 28, 1766 the House of Assembly with a request that the Assembly inquire of Lieutenant-Governor William Bull how he was informed of the Stamp Act, as he did not have the legal authority to institute such an act himself. The Assembly requested an answer from the Lieutenant-Governor on January 30, 1766, and was advised that those with the proper authority, the governor and the attorney general of the state, had notified him. A group of merchants then filed a petition stating their grievances and requested Bull do something about it.<sup>63</sup> He agreed to meet with them but after the meeting, Bull wrote (February 3, 1766) that as much as he would have liked to help the representatives and merchants, the law left him no power to do so. He added that he hoped to receive no more requests for help, as these would be made in vain. From that date on, the Charleston merchants began to boycott officially.<sup>64</sup>

The Stamp Act went into effect on November 1, 1765, and while the merchants had agreed to boycott, the official boycott did not begin until January 1, 1766, in most cases, or February 3 in Charleston, which created a two to three month interim. Even in this interim dramatic changes were evident in colonial newspapers.

Many publishers suspended printing for a short time and several major papers, especially in the south suspended printing indefinitely. In Philadelphia, neither the Pennsylvania Gazette nor the Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advertiser printed an issue the first week in November. Publisher Peter Timothy explained that the South Carolina Gazette will no longer be printed after October 31, 1765 because “it being impossible to continue without great loss to the printer,” as numerous subscribers had told him they would not buy one paper with a stamp on it.<sup>65</sup> The Maryland Gazette also suspended printing on October 31 with the exception of a few issues, until weekly printing resumed on March 6, 1766.<sup>66</sup> Printer Joseph Royale reacted similarly when he decided to discontinue the Virginia Gazette from November 1765 until March 1766.<sup>67</sup> The Georgia Gazette stopped printing throughout the Stamp Act crisis and well past the act’s repeal, from November 21, 1765 through May 21, 1766.<sup>68</sup>

Most papers that continued to publish changed their masthead to reflect the printers’ unhappiness with the requirement of stamps. The New York Mercury replaced the title of its paper with the sentence “No Stamped Paper to be had” for three weeks beginning November 4.<sup>69</sup> The Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advertiser dramatically added a skull and cross bones to the top of its masthead for two weeks and replaced its motto with “EXPIRING: In Hopes of a Resurrection to LIFE again.”<sup>70</sup> The New-York Gazette or the Weekly Post-Boy changed its motto, which appeared directly below the title, from “with the freshest Advices Foreign and Domestick” to “The united Voice of all His Majesty’s free and loyal Subjects in AMERICA, -- LIBERTY and PROPERTY, and NO STAMPS.”<sup>71</sup> This change lasted until the repeal of the Stamp Act. The Boston Evening-Post added the same sentence to its masthead.<sup>72</sup>

Dramatic articles and negative editorials against the Stamp Act appeared frequently in these editions. One such letter to the printers of the Boston Gazette and County Journal, signed by “Americanus”, stated, “I will suffer the most ignominious and torturing Death rather than submit to receive the accursed Stamp Papers.”<sup>73</sup> Printers of the Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advertiser and the Pennsylvania Gazette placed a notice to address their readers’ concerns in this regard:

We are sorry to be obliged to acquaint our Readers, that as the most UNCONSTITUTIONAL ACT that ever these Colonies could have imagined, to wit, The STAMP ACT, is feared to be obligatory upon us, after the First of November ensuing (the FATAL TO-MORROW) the publisher of this Paper unable to bear the Burden, has thought it expedient to STOP a while, in order to deliberate, whether any Methods can be found to elude the Chains forged for us, and escapes the insupportable Slavery; which it is hoped, from the just Representations now made against that Act, may be effected. Meanwhile, we must earnestly request every Individual of our Subscribers, many of whom have been long behind hand, that they would immediately discharge their respective Arrears, that we may be able not only to support ourselves during the Interval, but be better prepared to proceed again with this Paper, whenever an Opening appears for that Purpose, which we hope will be soon.<sup>74</sup>

The Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advertiser also printed in the margin of the first page, “Adieu, Adieu to the LIBERTY of the PRESS.”

Colonial printers’ belief that the Stamp Act meant financial ruin to their papers was exacerbated by a sharp decline in commercial advertising. After merchants signed the non-importation agreements, the number of ads dropped significantly, even though several weeks remained until the official boycott was to begin (see Table 1, Figures 1 and 2).<sup>75</sup> Charleston still averaged the most ads, but dropped from 140 to 99 per month, a 29 percent decline. Similarly, New York papers saw a 32 percent decrease, from 81 ads previously to 55 monthly. Philadelphia papers experienced the greatest change, but like New York and Charleston, dropped about a third (36 percent), falling from 46 to 30 ads on average. In March 1766, just prior to the repeal, the number of Philadelphia ads went as low as 16. In contrast, the monthly average of advertisements in Boston papers throughout the entire boycott actually increased from 51 to 64, a growth of 21 percent, going as high as 90 in December 1765.

<sup>75</sup> Such dramatic changes occurred during the interim period that the months of November and December are included with boycott figures. Because the boycott ended in most cities at some point in April, that month was not included in boycott statistics. The exception to this was Charleston where news of the repeal arrived only in May, so April figures were included in the boycott data. This applies to all future references to data during the boycott, unless otherwise noted. It must be noted that no paper was printed in Charleston during November and part of December 1765, so these months were omitted when calculating the average total of ads. Also, since no papers were printed the first week of November in Philadelphia, making the month’s data incomplete, it was excluded as well.

With fewer ads, the newspapers were shorter as well. Many of the typically lengthy ads were shortened down to just a few lines, which led to an average loss of roughly 1.5 pages of advertising for each paper. Even in Boston, where the number of ads increased, the size of the papers decreased due to smaller advertisements. This unexpected side effect of non-importation confirmed printers' sense that the Stamp Act threatened their businesses.

The reduction in the number of total ads shows a change in behavior of local merchants as well. Some historians argue that a boycott was actually in the best interest of colonial merchants. With high-quality imports unavailable, consumers dropped their standards, which allowed colonial merchants to sell many goods that they had been unable to sell before, thus making a profit.<sup>76</sup> Also, since they sold goods already in stock, there was no need to order more from English suppliers. This could have made it possible for colonial merchants to pay off debts they had incurred by buying English goods on credit.<sup>77</sup> If merchants did import English goods, they did not advertise them during the boycott, possibly for fear of adverse public opinion. Thus, the lack of advertisements did not necessarily mean that merchants were struggling financially. Rather it could mean that the goods merchants had in stock did not justify the expense of advertising, since it was a seller's market. If true, this suggests that, more than merchants, the printers bore the financial brunt of this boycott.

As a direct result of the boycott, everyday consumer goods became infused with political meaning.<sup>78</sup> The purchase of imported goods, especially cloths and dry goods, was considered taboo and "unpatriotic," while American-made goods, thanks to their new political and "pro-colonies" meaning, suddenly became quite fashionable and desirable. Selling British or American goods during the boycott was also perceived as a political statement on the part of the merchant, whether they had intended it to or not. Thus, if a merchant advertised imported goods, they tended not to go into much detail. The ad would simply say "An assortment of European Goods," with no descriptions.<sup>79</sup>

A few representative samples from each city include: Pennsylvania Gazette, 23 January 1766; Pennsylvania Journal and Weekly Advisor, 10 April 1776; South Carolina Gazette and Country Journal, 18 February 1766; Boston Gazette and County Journal, 4 November 1765; Boston Evening-Post, 13 January 1766; New York Mercury, 2 December 1765; New-York Gazette or the Weekly Post-Boy, 13 March 1766.

By contrast, merchants who made and sold American-made goods tended to emphasize this and would often appeal to customers' sense of patriotic duty. For example, John Lasher included in his ads for American-made shoes this exhortation: "Therefore by encouraging this branch of business only, they [Ladies in general] will find it to be of infinite service to this government, for reason too well known."<sup>80</sup> The first line of this distiller's ad, which took up a remarkable full column and a half, read, "Richard Deane, Distiller; Takes this Method to inform the Publick, and particularly all true Patriots, who sincerely wish for the Prosperity of AMERICA."<sup>81</sup> Abeel and Byvanck, merchants from New York, typically listed a variety of over one hundred goods in their ads and marked all American-made items with the symbol "(a)."<sup>82</sup> Hugh Gaine, printer of the New York Mercury, advertised that he had published the book "The Death of Abel," and was selling it for half price of the "London Edition." He noted at the bottom of his ad, "therefore 'tis hoped all Lovers of America will look upon it as the Manufacture of this Country, and give it Preference to any other."<sup>83</sup> Anchor maker Daniel Offley made an accusation in his ad that other merchants were trying to pass off their anchors as American-made when in fact they were not. By doing so, they were able to sell their anchors for less than Offley's: "Whereas there are a number of anchors sent to this place, and advertised for sale, by the name of American made anchors, and offered on half-penny in the pound lower than mine, or any other new anchors in the place." He went on then to explain why his anchors cost more than imported ones, hoping to convince potential buyers of the merit of his anchors.<sup>84</sup>

Ads promoting the use of homespun cloth, the wearing of which also made an important political statement, appeared in much greater frequency during the boycott. In Philadelphia, a store opened to sell homemade cloths and goods. Its ad read,

We now with Pleasure, can acquaint our Reader that a Market for all Kinds of HOME MANUFACTURED GOODS, will be opened To-morrow...where there may be had, a Variety of FINE HOME-MADE BROADCLOTHS, etc. The said Market will be kept open by WILLIAM SMITH, ...so that those who would encourage our own Manufactures, may no longer be at a Loss for a Supply; and the Cloths, etc, directed to the said WILLIAM SMITH, with the lowest Prices affixed, will be take due Care of, and the Money paid, as soon as they are sold.<sup>85</sup>

Another ad by hosier Daniel Mause, which also intended to appeal to the buyer's political leanings, noted,

[Daniel Mause] Takes this method of informing the public that he has lately erected a number of looms for the manufacturing of thread, cotton, and stockings and other kinds of hosiery, of any size or quality, hoping the good people of this and the neighbouring provinces, will encourage this undertaking, at a time when AMERICA calls for the endeavors of her sons, and the goodness of the PENNSYLVANIA MADE STOCKINGS is so well known, and so universally esteemed. Said Mause will work up thread, cotton, worsted, yarn, etc in the best manner for the country gentlemen and others who may be pleased to employ him, for a moderate satisfaction and gives the best price for THREAD, COTTON, WORSTED and YARN of the produce and manufacture of AMERICA only.<sup>86</sup>

Linda Kerber offers a cautionary note regarding commercial decisions in this highly political marketplace. She points out that even those who desired to remain neutral might be accused of taking sides as a result of ordinary and mundane marketplace actions.<sup>87</sup> Nevertheless, the goods merchants were selling had become politicized and the ads for these same goods had become politicized as well.

Another interesting but expected effect of the Stamp Act boycott on advertising were the changes in advertisements promoting imported goods. Overall, ads for imported goods represented a smaller share of total advertisements, as one would predict given that the objective of boycott was to end the sale of British goods (see Table 2, Figures 3 and 4). New York had impressive numbers, with ads for imports dropping from a monthly average of 57 percent of all ads before the boycott, to just 37 percent (35 percent decline). Additionally, when ignoring the data from the interim period and using only data from months of the actual boycott—January through April—New York’s monthly average of import ads was only 23 percent of all advertisements. The momentum of the boycott grew as it went on, with import ads hitting an all-time low of 15 percent in April 1766. Also impressive was the effort of Charleston’s merchants, who reduced their ads for imports from a high of 76 percent of all ads to 50 percent, <sup>87</sup> Kerber, Women of the Republic: Intellect Ideology in Revolutionary America, pp. 38; Another interesting effect of boycotts on advertising relates to the politicization of women. A key factor in this politicization of goods was mobilizing the support of women. Since women made purchasing decisions in most colonial households, the boycott sponsors felt they had to enlist female support to make the boycott a success. As this cause was so political, it was during the Stamp Act boycott that the beginning of the initial politicization of women is noticed. Evidence of this, however subtle, was seen in ads published during the boycott. An ad from the Pennsylvania Journal on March 13, 1766 includes a picture of shoe and reads: “To the Ladies of Philadelphia, As there was the commencement of this year a Shoe-manufactory begun by William Ross and George and John Kidd, who now makes all kinds of callimanco shoes, warranted as goods as any imported from Britain or Ireland, and generally sold as Eight shillings and a dollar are now sold by George and John Kidd, at their shop in Second-Street....at the low price of Seven shillings per pair.” This ad was very political, targeting a newly politicized group, women. The picture was significant also. Pictures were rare in ads during this time, averaging one or two per paper. The fact that a rare and expensive picture was used in an ad targeting women indicates that they were becoming a small but key part of the political process, through their everyday purchases.

matching New York's decline rate of 35 percent. The merchants in Philadelphia also remained committed to the boycott, lowering their average from 59 percent to 42 percent, an overall drop of 29 percent.<sup>88</sup> Conversely, Boston decreased its import ads from a high 75 percent to 61 percent monthly (by far the highest average of all major American cities) representing a total reduction of only 19 percent. The data from Portsmouth, a small city about 60 miles from Boston, also yielded unusual results in that its monthly average actually increased from 21 percent to 34 percent, a 61 percent climb. However, it must be noted that the merchants in Portsmouth had never instituted a formal non-importation agreement.

<sup>88</sup> When figuring Philadelphia's data, I left out the month of December 1765 because its numbers were so much higher than all other boycott months. While the other months averaged just above or below 40 percent, December's 60 percent skewed the results. It is likely that December was so high because it was the last interim month before the boycott started and was the merchant's last chance to advertise and sell their imported goods.

Not surprisingly, ads for American-made goods went through notable changes as well. As expected, the number and percentage of such ads in each city increased (see Table 3, Figures 5 and 6). Philadelphia had by far the most impressive numbers, raising its average monthly percentage of ads for American-made goods to 37 percent from an already high number of 21 percent before the boycott, representing a 76 percent gain and reaching an all-time high of 47 percent in February 1766. In a culture so dependent on imports, having almost 50 percent of total ads promote colonial-made goods represents quite an accomplishment by the promoters and enforcers of the boycott. Equally remarkable, Charleston increased its average of ads for American-made goods from 9 to 29 percent, a number comparable to northern cities. Overall, this represented an extraordinary 222 percent increase. New York's average increased only slightly, from an already high rate of 20 percent to 22 percent. This 22 percent figure is misleading however, as the numbers fluctuated greatly from 11 percent in November 1765 to 35 percent in February 1766. During the interim period, the number of ads for local manufactures was typically low, but during the period of the actual boycott (January 1766 – March 1766), New York averaged 27 percent, an overall increase of 35 percent.<sup>89</sup> Boston's numbers remained consistent throughout the boycott, averaging 16 percent, up from 14 percent in the summer and fall of 1765 (an overall gain of 14 percent). Compared to the rate of increase in the other major markets (35 percent, 76 percent, and 222 percent), Boston's merchants exhibited a lack of commitment to selling American-made goods.

<sup>89</sup> It must also be noted that New York had the second highest average before the boycott.

What is significant about these numbers is that while an estimated three quarters to seven-eighths of all Boston merchants pledged not to import British goods, over fifty percent of their ads used phrases like “Imported from England, Bristol and Liverpool,” “Just imported in the latest ships from London,” or “general Assortment of English Goods.”<sup>90</sup> Although there was almost a 20 percent decrease in import advertising in Boston during the boycott, which was similar to Philadelphia’s 29 percent, Bostonians advertised a greater percentage of imported goods than Philadelphia before the boycott and as a result needed to cut back on the consumption of British goods more severely. Boston merchants’ lack of commitment to the boycott is highlighted Charleston, a city also very dependent on imports, seeing a 35 percent drop in import advertising.

<sup>90</sup> John W. Tyler, Smugglers and Patriots: Boston Merchant and the Advent of the American Revolution, Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1986, pp. 91.

Massachusetts merchants had a history of habitually failing to comply with trade laws, beginning as early as 1661, when Boston merchants were accused of smuggling French goods.<sup>91</sup> Imperial officials and the Board of Trade repeatedly complained about Boston's trading with Dutch, French, and native enemies during wartime, up through the Seven Years' War.<sup>92</sup> In fact, Massachusetts lost its charter in 1684 because of the legislature's open support for smuggling operations.<sup>93</sup> The commercial and political atmosphere in Boston was one of minimal enforcement and a high degree of tolerance and respectability for illegal trade. The ads in Boston papers during the boycott sponsored by the Stamp Act Congress and the Boston merchants association fit this pattern of non-compliance.

Merchants who continued to import despite the boycott could become political, social and economic outcasts, depending on their city of residence. Philadelphia was especially hard on those who broke the agreement, even creating a special committee to investigate and punish them. In other cities, merchants and others dealt with violators in less official ways and to varying degrees. With this intense pressure to conform, merchants reputations, social standings and ability to make profits changed as well. Importers such as Joseph Wood, William Scot, William and Mary Symonds, all of Philadelphia, and Caleb Blanchard of Boston, attempted to advertise their imported British goods early on during the boycott but quit after a few weeks. These merchants could have had a genuine change of heart and discovered a true commitment to the American cause. It is at least as likely, though, that their altered behavior in the marketplace was a response to negative attention and pressure from friends, family, neighbors, partners, rivals, and/or clients. Many importers chose to change the wording of their ads to make them less controversial. “Greg, Cunningham, and Company” of New York frequently advertised imports before the boycott. After October 31, 1765 their ads no longer mentioned “just imported” until after the act’s repeal but did on occasion list among the items they had for sale “British brandy” and “London porter” during that time.<sup>94</sup> “Griffith and Cape” of Charleston advertised British goods constantly before and after the boycott. During the boycott, they continued to advertise but with no mention of British goods, only Philadelphia flour. John and David Rhea of Philadelphia advertised simply, “an assortment of dry goods.” Many major advertisers behaved in a similar way, including only non-imported goods in their ads, or not mentioning the English origin of the advertised goods.

While some importers altered the wording of their ads, many quit advertising altogether. Jolley Allen, Frederick William Geyer, and Samuel Eliot, all of Boston, Abraham Duryee of New York, and “Nowell & Lord” of Charleston, followed this approach. Each of these merchants placed over twenty ads in the year examined and all refrained for the most part from advertising during the boycott.

With many major importers of British goods refraining from importation, new merchants willing to risk public criticism and forgo political conformity stepped forward. New merchants, such as Benjamin and Edward Davis and “Lewis and Bant” of Boston, Peter Goelet and Samuel Deall of New York, and Nathaniel Tweedy of Philadelphia, started to advertise imported goods constantly during the boycott, promising “a general Assortment of English Goods,” never having done so before that winter.<sup>95</sup> After the repeal of the Stamp Act, these importers quit advertising altogether. Perhaps unable to compete with the established connections and clientele of the original merchants, they were unable to maintain profits in normal business conditions.

Naturally, the newfound popularity of American-made goods during the boycott motivated merchants to advertise such goods. New American businesses committed to home manufacturing emerged during the boycott and existing businesses also made known their locally manufactured products, seizing this rare opportunity to exploit the advantage of local manufactures over imported goods. Charles Oliver Bruff, a merchant from New York, started to publicize his home-made jewelry on October 28, 1765 until March of 1766. While “Ogden and Hewes” of Philadelphia advertised sparingly previously, as of December 26, 1765 their ads for “New England Rum” and “Rhode Island Cheese” began to appear weekly, until the middle of March 1766.<sup>96</sup> James McElroy, Boston merchant, publicized the fact that he made and sold anvils, starting in

January 1766, and continued weekly until just after repeal. Thomas and Charles Moore of Philadelphia started making and selling malt beer during the boycott in March. They continued to advertise until the end of May 1766.

As expected, there were many economic changes for merchants during the boycott. Some found ways to turn a profit while putting their typical business practices on hold. Others, such as those who sold American-made goods, discovered an upsurge in sales. When entrenched merchants refrained from importing, it offered a rare economic opportunity to new merchants more willing to risk criticism and disdain. Typically, the most successful upper class merchants voluntarily signed non-importation agreements. Once the boycott began, refusing to sell British goods became an important social statement for established merchants, which left an opening for lower class merchants, who had no social status in polite society to uphold.

The Stamp Act crisis certainly was a tumultuous period for thirteen of the American colonies. Many changes took place during these five months, as evidenced by newspapers and commercial advertising. Variations in advertisements reveal shifts in the practices of merchants and printers as well as the consumers who shaped their business practices. The drop in the overall number of advertisements showed a significant impact on the revenues of printers and, to a lesser extent, merchants. A statistical and textual analysis of advertisements for local and imported goods lend evidence to Kerber and Breen's contention that the boycott infused consumer goods with political meaning.<sup>97</sup> This was less true in Boston than in New York, Philadelphia, and Charleston. Nevertheless, changes in advertising practices demonstrate the beginnings of a loosely weaved ethical and political unification within urban communities as well as across colonial borders.

CHAPTER 4

AFTER REPEAL: BUSINESS AS USUAL

Once the colonists learned of the Stamp Act's repeal, the crisis of conformity versus profits ended for colonial merchants. A statistical and textual analysis of advertisements during the period immediately following the repeal demonstrates that business practices began to resume as normal. More evidence reveals the colonists' continued attachment to British goods and a lack of faith in American goods, especially in Boston. Advertising also shows that although the moral crisis for merchants had ended, the economic ramifications of their choices during the boycott continued.

Parliament voted to repeal the Stamp Act on March 18, 1766. However, due to travel time between the two continents, it took at least five weeks for the colonists to hear the news. Rumors, often sent in letters from London merchants weeks before the actual repeal, promised that Parliament was debating repeal, with intent to vote for it. Though colonists believed these rumors optimistic, they had reason to hope repeal was imminent. When the news did arrive, it came in varied forms. At first, newspapers printed letters telling of the repeal from ships' captains who had just arrived from the Caribbean, though these were not considered reliable sources. When ships arriving directly from ports in Great Britain began bringing with them the same news, no doubt remained that colonial merchants had achieved victory.<sup>98</sup> Once the news reached them, in many cities the merchants set up a meeting within the week to discuss the cancellation of the boycott. It took several more weeks, typically in early to mid May, for the colonists to receive the official word of repeal, which resulted in public displays of jubilation such as bell ringing and fireworks.

<sup>98</sup> News of repeal directly from London first appeared in newspapers on April 14 in Boston, April 17 in Philadelphia, April 21 in New York and May 6 in Charleston.

After the colonists learned of the Stamp Act's repeal, there were definite changes in advertising. As expected, the average number of total ads per month went up considerably, though not quite the pre-boycott level in most cities (see Table 1, Figures 1 and 2). The most dramatic change occurred in Philadelphia where the average jumped from 30 during the boycott to 42 ads monthly afterwards (a 41 percent increase). In May 1766, Philadelphia papers averaged 60 ads, going even higher than the pre-boycott average of 46 monthly ads. The average number of ads in Charleston papers also experienced an increase to 120 from 99 during the boycott, representing a change of 22 percent.<sup>99</sup> The numbers for New York papers similarly increased, from a monthly average of 55 ads during the boycott to 65 following the repeal, a 17 percent growth. Boston, the only city in which the average number of ads increased during the boycott, going up 21 percent, increased another 22 percent after the boycott, with the average rising from 64 to 78. This average went as high as 91 ads in June 1766. These increases represent the merchants returning to their normal pre-boycott business practices. Though the number of advertisements increased considerably in every city, the levels still fell slightly short of the numbers reached before the boycott in every city except Boston (which exceeded its pre-boycott numbers by 54 percent).

<sup>99</sup> Since Charleston did not learn of the repeal until May 6, 1766, data from part of the month was still considered during the boycott. For monthly averages after the boycott, May was not included and only data from June and July 1766 was used. This is true for all other monthly data for Charleston after the boycott.

Figure 2. Average Total Ads

Given their dependence on imported goods, it is not surprising that colonists were eager to begin importing after the repeal of the Stamp Act, as shown in the rise of advertising for British goods (see Table 2, Figures 3 and 4). Philadelphia papers experienced the highest growth rate with the monthly average of import advertising rising from 46 to 54 percent—a 19 percent hike—reaching 76 percent in June 1766. In Charleston, the percentage of imported ads increased from 50 to 57 after the boycott, representing an increase of 15 percent but still falling short of the pre-boycott level of 76 percent. While the average in New York papers dropped from 37 to 35 percent because of the unusually low 13 percent rate in May 1766, by June of the same year, the numbers were almost back to city’s pre-boycott figures of 56 percent. Boston papers had by far the highest average of advertisements devoted to imports, increasing from 61 percent during the boycott to 68 percent after, an overall change of 11 percent. While advertising for imports did increase, the numbers for all cities remained lower than their pre-boycott numbers. However, this should be understood as a product of trans-Atlantic communication and logistics (orders often took 6 weeks to reach Britain and at least another six weeks for the goods to reach America) rather than an indication of a newfound attachment to American products.

As further indication of the colonists' attachment to imports, the number of ads for American-made goods dropped severely following the boycott (see Table 3, Figures 5 and 6). The percentage of ads for homemade goods in Charleston fell from 29 to 16 percent, representing a 44 percent change. Philadelphia's average percentage also decreased from 37 to 25, a total reduction of 32 percent. New York papers surprisingly increased the percentage of American-made ads after the boycott, rising from 22 percent to 26 percent. However, New York's monthly averages fluctuated, going as low as 19 percent in June 1766, which was lower than the pre-boycott average of 20 percent. Despite the major decrease in average, all three cities maintained a higher percentage of ads for American-made goods after the boycott than the before. Conversely, Boston's average of 16 percent, which was already low by comparison, fell to 9 percent, a total reduction of 45 percent. Boston's average was 14 percent before the boycott, making it the only city with a lower average of ads for American-made goods after the boycott than before. Regardless of the fact that most cities kept their averages higher after than before the boycott, (the boycott had spurred the expansion of the American manufacturing sector which did not simply evaporate after the repeal) the great drop in the average of ads for American-made goods shows how anxious the colonists were to abandon their effort and return to their imports.

This consistent rise in import advertising is significant for several reasons. First, it reinforces the theory that the colonists really were dependent on manufactured British goods.<sup>100</sup> The averages would have been even higher were it not for circumstances beyond merchants' control, such as travel time. Thus, import advertising later on in 1766 was indicative of the actual amount of imports in American markets following repeal. For example, the percentage of ads for imported goods in June 1766 was 79 percent in Boston, 76 percent in Philadelphia and 69 percent in Charleston. This was above the pre-boycott level for both Boston and Philadelphia.

Merchants experienced changes following the boycott as well. While some importers resumed advertising after the repeal, others never did. Andrew McMyer of New York promoted British goods including everything from silk and carpet to bibles, cutlery and sealing wax. He advertised regularly from July 1765 until December 12, 1765 and did not resume after the boycott. Another New York importer, James Murray, advertised almost weekly until October 31, 1765 and never did again. While it is possible that merchants started other businesses during this time or tried to survive on their savings until repeal, it must have been discouraging. Many of those merchants that complied with their patriotic (or treasonous) duty faced the very real possibility of permanently going out of business, replaced by those who did not comply.

Some that stepped into the import business during the boycott had staying power. Some examples of these new importers are Mansell, Corbett and Company of Boston, William Palfrey, and John Symmes, also of Boston, Henry White of New York, Peter Turner, and Garrett and George Meade of Philadelphia. All of these merchants advertised imports frequently during the boycott and continued to do so after the repeal of the Stamp Act when other merchants could again import. Of all trends and changes that happened to merchants as a result of the boycott, the trend of new merchants coming forward during the boycott and staying after was by far the most dominant pattern.<sup>101</sup>

Many merchants who had shifted to advertising American-made goods during the boycott developed a steady clientele as a result of their advertising and, therefore, continued to advertise even after the repeal of the Stamp Act. Hawes and Laughton of Charleston began to advertise their American-made coaches, wheels, and carts in March 1766 and continued to do so after the repeal. Charleston merchant William Brown did not begin to promote the fact that he “dyes cloths, linens and silks,” a service potentially very useful for homespun cloths, until March 18, 1766, but kept the publication running until June 1766.<sup>102</sup> William Smith of Philadelphia who had opened a store to market only American-made goods started advertising mostly cloths in December 1765 but by July 1766 included a variety of dry goods, spices and liquors. Charles Wharton began to advertise his American-made anchors in February. After a few months, he advertised several assorted goods in addition to anchors and continued after the boycott with American-made ads.

When well-established importers refrained from selling imported goods during the boycott, they took a great economic risk, opening the door to competitors and new merchants to take over their market share. This economic threat was real as shown by the number of importers that did not resume their typical business practices after the boycott and the increase in new importers who started advertising heavily during the boycott and continued to do so after. At the same time, when entrenched merchants chose to sell the boycotted goods, they took a great social risk, potentially allowing their reputations and social standings to be called into question. Importers faced an unenviable decision during the boycott, forced to choose between profits and community approval. In contrast, the boycott provided a great opportunity to the manufacturers and distributors of American-made goods. Given the chance to sell their goods in a time of newfound popularity, the boycott allowed merchants to attract and potentially keep customers who had never considered American goods before.

Advertisements after the boycott provide continued evidence of the colonists' devotion to imported goods and of Boston's uniqueness compared to the other American commercial centers. While Boston followed the same trends as the other three cities, such as an increase in total ads, an increase in imports and a decrease in American-made goods, Boston's statistics were still not close to those of other cities, because of the lack of conformity during the boycott.

CHAPTER 5

CONCLUSION

When examining the Stamp Act crisis, historians have mined colonial newspapers for news items and editorials to gauge American levels of opposition or support. A statistical and textual analysis of 5,810 advertisements from four main port cities in 1765-1766 suggests that advertisements, in fact, offer researchers a more authentic picture of colonists' actions and attitudes (the ads, for example, reveal a level of indifference that editorial and newspapers do not convey). It indicates that prior to the boycott American colonists were truly devoted to British goods, as imports comprised a significant majority of advertisements, averaging 67 percent of all ads. Ads for American-made goods represented a significant minority, averaging 16 percent of total ads. Even during the boycott, merchants continued to advertise imports just as consumers continued to buy them. Following the boycott, the colonists quickly abandoned their "Buy American" campaigns and returned to the purchase of imports. This supports the findings of historians such as Carole Shammas, T. H. Breen and Maxine Berg who argue that during this period the American colonies were cultures driven by the consumption of British goods. This American attachment to imports challenges the belief of many historians that a sense of nationalism existed among Americans before 1776, as evidenced by the unification they experienced during the Stamp Act crisis.

Given this commercial anglophilia, the merchants' decision to boycott British culture and goods resulted in a crisis pitting the forces of community against the culture of consumerism and capitalism. Just as consumers were expected to curb their desire for goods, merchants were asked to ignore their knowledge of the public's desires (and the profits that accompanied them) and to conform to righteous public opinion for the sake of the interest or good of the community. The fact that many of the key merchants and importers in each city lived up to the public's expectations of them is evidenced by the drop in advertisements for imports in most cities by one-third, to below 50 percent. This decision by some merchants to place the needs and expectations of the community before their own personal gain offered a rare economic opportunity for others. New importers, less concerned by public opinion, came forward during the boycott to take over the forfeited market share, often keeping it after repeal. Merchants who made and sold American goods were also presented with a rare opportunity to gain the attention and business of customers who had never considered their goods before, as advertisements for American goods rose to approximately thirty percent of all ads in most cities by the end of the boycott. In this case, however, the capitalist impulse and communal propriety did not clash.

A perfect example of the constant struggle between the forces of community and capitalism is demonstrated by the changes that occurred in both Charleston and Boston during the boycott. While both were completely devoted to British goods before the boycott, Charleston business practices went through dramatic changes during the boycott. By the end of the boycott, Charleston advertisements for imports dropped by over 40 percent, and ads for American-made goods increased by over 200 percent, indicating a strong commitment on the part of merchants to the communal project of commercial coercion. Boston merchants on the other hand, exhibited a strong individualistic streak driven by a quest for profits, rather than communal goals. Despite lip service to the importance of the boycott and the good of the public, merchants there hardly changed their business practices, with regard to both British imports and American-made goods.

The twin features of colonial society that are traditionally used to explain the rise of anti-British sentiment—an embrace of market capitalism and a growing sense of nationhood—were, in fact, competing forces. The ethos of capitalism accepted self-interest and competition within society as natural and morally neutral, whereas nationalism stressed the importance of cooperation and sacrifice of individual goals for communal goals. The Stamp Act boycott put this tension on display. The nationalistic “buy American” campaign advocated by the Stamp Act Congress and enforced by the Sons of Liberty did gain momentum, as evidenced by the advertising statistics in some markets. Yet the same statistics indicate a strong tendency among merchants and consumers—even in Philadelphia and Charleston—to pursue individual goals, at the expense of the “common good,” as defined by local communities and by the Stamp Act Congress.

It should come as no surprise that Boston—a major commercial center characterized by the capitalist ethos—was the last major northern port to agree to the boycott.<sup>103</sup> Nor is it surprising that Boston merchants and consumers were less mindful of the boycott. The economic individualism fostered by the capitalist ethos necessarily undermined a commitment to communal projects like the boycott. Communities like Charleston, on the other hand, in which communal bonds were stronger and where the moral economy was not yet superseded by the capitalist ethos, were much more effective in eliciting compliance on the part of merchants and customers.

Neither the attachment of Americans to market capitalism nor their attachment to British goods precludes the possibility of an American sense of nationhood. What is apparent, however, is that capitalism challenged and undermined a commitment to communal sentiments such as nationalism. Moreover, it is also clear that if Americans did share a sense of nationhood in the 1760s, it cannot be gauged by a rejection of “Englishness.”

APPENDIX

The following is an abridged version of the advertisement data. I chose to eliminate the column that described the goods advertised, as it doubled the length of the spreadsheet. For anyone interested, an electronic file of the entire spreadsheet is available.

The spreadsheet is organized first by city and then publication date. The column titled “American-made” lists all ads for American-made goods, as well as the exact homemade good advertised.
